

My values

What are my values? I think they're family, friendship and honesty. The most important of them is family. That's because when you're with your relatives, you feel good, secure and calm. My parents, grandparents and brother are with me in good and bad times. In friendship it's very similar but family is closer although sometimes there are many problems.

I can't imagine my life without my friends, sharing the news and gossips with them, going out and doing most of things together. This is the best feeling to know you can count on people who are close to you. The base of both those values is belief, the feeling that you can trust them because their feelings are as honest as yours. If you don't, I'm afraid this is not the true friendship or family.

Being honest is very precious to me. I can't see any reason to lie. Many people do this to avoid some problems. But it causes pangs of conscience and in general it is not a good way to live.

It's better to live in honesty with your family and friends.

Anu Enkhbajar 1e