

The Most Important Things In Life Are Free

As human beings, every day, we discover new frontiers of our morality. For centuries we've been creating and forming the term "man" to finally establish some standards of behavior regarded as correct. Despite the passage of time, some things have not changed their meanings, values and ideas. And here comes the question: do the most important things in life are really free?

Approaching the topic of this type, we must take into account one important, but often overlooked detail – every each of us has its own human nature, and so we're also the epitome of imperfection striving for perfection. Ironic fact is that we are looking for features or aspects of our personalities – and thus – we should know them well. However, we don't. Therefore, we still ask questions that themselves contain the answer to the problem that torments us.

Many of life's values can't be bought or there's no way to reflect their uniqueness through material goods, From birth to death – we know, we create and we store the ideas which let us proudly call ourselves "humans". Moments, feelings, but most of all freedom. Our most unique privilege of being human. Something that makes our species worthy of existence in reality. Our small private prison – painful, enlightening, eternal. But only ours. And for the price, which no mind can understand, we paid – no one is able to take it away from us.

Karolina Gala

2b