

My favourite book

When she asked me what my favourite book was, in my head suddenly appeared a lot of thoughts. In my life books occurred very early. Thanks to them I discovered and learned about the world. At every stage of my life I had a favourite reading. First they were rhymed verses, later stories about Indians. However, in response to her question I chose the closest book to my heart- a diary.

The diary was written by my great-grandfather from 1939 to 1955. He described his private life and the changes in his environment. For example, the outbreak of war and his adventures, which he met in the army. Everything what was described is unusual because it is based on real facts. Each record reflects heavy, daily life at that time but there are also many pages telling funny and nice stories. To some of them there are glued old photos. The plot is full of both action and ordinary drama. The main characters are very brave and loyal. I admire them. The most touching parts of the diary were the times, when my great-grandfather described the moments of death of his friends, which were always sudden and tragic.

These are the reasons why I told her about this book. It is unique. I hope that one day it will be published.
