

My extremely funny adventure

I had to get out of this place. Too much noise and lights, stinging in the eyes. I saw the stars that died a long time ago. I walked ahead, away from the thumping music.

Suddenly I saw a figure, looming among the faint streetlights. I was reminding all the horror stories that I read last night. The figure was getting closer. I could already tell that it was a man. Fear flooded my mind. My heart started beating so fast that it hurt. I slowed a step. I wanted to turn around, run the other way and scream, but through my mouth just coming out a quiet moan.

Then ... I woke up. It was 11 am on Saturday and I was dressed. I had been tired and went to sleep in clothes. I couldn't figure out that this horrific pain was just a dream. In panic I ran out from the house and started to warn people against this terrible guy. Suddenly, I came to the conclusion that what I say doesn't make sense and people look at me like at a madwoman. Thousands of thoughts flashed through my head and I knew what had happened. I was standing in the middle of the road and laughed at myself. It was just a dream and I believed in it, because of the silly stories!

To this day, when someone proposes to tell the frightening story, I burst into laugh at the memory of my hilarious adventure.
