

FAVOURITE BOOK

Human life is a constant journey, an adventure. What if we could live life several times and each time differently, in a different reality? That chance give us books. We absorb hundreds of copies. One is an inspiration to reach for another. Under the cover of each of them, waiting to be discovered the infinite universe.

And then we come to that one, we cannot put down. We reach for it again and again, and every time we read it as if it was the first time. Reading a favorite book is like meeting an old good friend. You reach for it when you want a break from the often heavy reality. It fills the moments of emptiness, depression and sadness. The dull moments in our everyday life turn into an exciting experience. That book changes something in us, does not allow us to release from itself and makes us even after repeating reading we want to return to it.

George Martin said - The reader may live the life of a thousand people before he dies. A man who does not read has only one life. On the other hand, Wolter rightly noted, that books are like people: very few have huge significance for us. The rest simply disappears in the crowd.

So look for friends-favorite books, that make us easier to go through life, that enrich our world and make it become more interesting. In the end, books give us something amazing: the great feelings that never become ours, and great pain, which we can easily get rid of, closing the book.
